About the Author

Hello my name is Danny wheelhouse and I am currently a writer living in England. I have always enjoyed writing fiction from a very young age and this is the first book I have written. I suffer from a condition known as Autism which affects the process and perception of how someone interprets information especially in social circumstances. During my school years I was unaware I had this condition and I was also bullied both physically and mentally by both students and teachers. My school years were not pleasant in the slightest and it wasn't until I left school when I was diagnosed that I was Autistic. However, I had a few coping mechanisms in school and one was writing. I used to forget the dreary reality around me by writing and creating stories of unique characters going on incredible adventures. I would create entire worlds in my head to escape from the harshness of school. I think that was when I really started to develop such a fondness for writing. I would write short stories all the time even when I wasn't supposed to be like for example during maths class. Teachers would constantly punish me for this, they would tell me I was wasting my time and that I will never amount to anything. Even today I still struggle often with society and social interaction but my passion for writing still burns brightly. I hope you all enjoy reading my book as much as I did writing it. I have meticulously gone through my book to make it as perfect as I can but some slight mistakes may remain.
